How to use:

Start with a heat protector on damp hair. Then, hair must be dried completely.

Then part your hair in half to even the workload and separate a small section of hair so the styling magic can begin.

Before you clamp that sucker down, you must be reminded of the golden rule of curling with a flat iron: YOU HAVE TO KEEP MOVING! If you stop, the heat will create unsightly kinks and or/damage.

Just don't over-think it. Once you make flat-iron-to-hair contact, you begin moving the iron down that section of hair, keeping the flat iron horizontal or slightly angled, slowly rotating it so that your wrist is now facing forward. I've had a few gal pals express that they figured out how to achieve flat iron curls on their left side, but not the right. If you are twisting the curls back towards you, I completely agree! The right side just isn't as natural for some reason. My little trick for long hair is to flick the section of hair over the flat iron once you've started moving downwards. This will make the twisting motion much easier.

For extra grip, or perhaps just an old curling iron habit, I sometimes hold onto the top of the flat iron to achieve that full twirl/rotation of the flat iron.

Once I'm done curling, I spray all over and scrunch upwards, then smooth out and finger comb the frizzes. It can be used for both straightening and styling. All should be done on clean and dry hair.
